

A MAN WITH ONE OF THOSE FACES

I don't want the typical design of a book in t he crime genre as mine has that quirky comedy element and I'm not trying to hide it. I've enclosed pictures of some covers I think probably reflect my book more. As the title is long, images as in the samples shown below with the name dominating the front cover is certainly an option but obviously that is only one of many. Another would be any variations featuring the outline of a head as it would fit with the name. Again, I amuch keener on drawn than anything using photos.My central character is a small time conman who takes advantage of the fact that heoften gets confused for other people. He is down on his luck so definitely not suit and tie. Think late 20s for age. The fact that he is often confused for other people because he is the exact average of the typical irish male is a factor in the book - so feel free to experiment with ideas around him having identity issues - i.e. not really knowing who heis because he is always pretending to be somebody else. that is only one of many. Another would be any variations featuring the outline of a head as it would fit with the name. Again, I amuch keener on drawn than anything using photos.My central character is a small time conman who takes a dvantage of the fact that heoften gets confused

CAIMH MCDONNELL one of many. Another would be any variations featuring the outline of a head as it would fit with the name. Again, I amuch keener on drawn than anything using photos. My central character is a small time comman who takes advantage of the fact that heoften gets confused

A MAN WITH ONE OF THOSE

FACES

CAIMH MCDONNELL

CAIMH MCDONNELL

When children experience the death of a loved one, people assume they will recover—and it often looks as though they are doing fine. But what would they tell you if they had the words? Now you can know.

When Ellen Janzen, age 11, loses her mom to cancer, her father is unable to help her mourn. She feels alone, neglected and forgotten—by people, but also by God. For her, the mountains have crashed into the sea and the world is giving way under her feet.

Many years later, Ellen finds a pathway through her repressed sorrow and grief. This brings her to a crossroad—accept God's healing and restoration, or continue to live in despair and loneliness.

Read and enter Ellen's journey to healing as an adult, but not until after reading the thoughts of young Ellen, Elenita, as she recounts how the loss of a parent impacts a young child. The compelling story will hold you captive as you gain new insights into childhood loss.

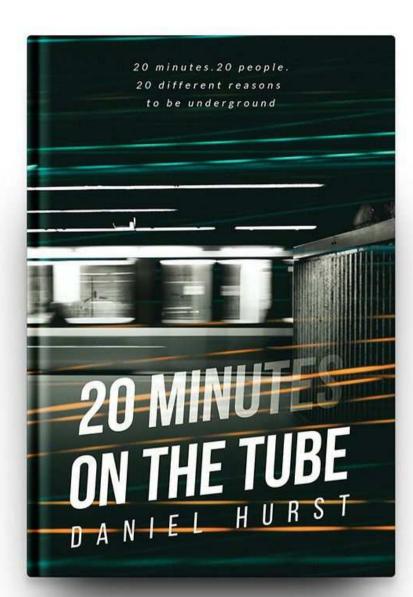

Ellen Janzen is a third culture kid and survivor of childhood loss who helps others navigate the maze of grief and loss leading to restoration and emotional maturity. She coaches women and families in Canada and overseas, supporting them through grief, trauma and loss. She also coaches families to connect fully and thrive in relationship. She lives in the cold north of

The Day the Mountains

Canada, enjoying watching her family blossom into three generations. She blogs on the topic of childhood loss and grief on facebook: The Day the Mountains Crashed into the Sea.

Surviving the devastation of childhood loss.

ELLEN JANZEN

Name Surname SWEAR WORDS That Will Make You Your Pants

rense Eton) Rose Rosemond A PoseProse Creation